AETHER INNOVATIONS

OWNER, AETHER MEDICAL BUSINESS SERVICES

With a reputation as a leader and innovator in the high-tech sector, Mark Calomeni brings with him more than two decades of excellence to his career. Today, he is the senior vice president of engineering for Aether Innovations, a medical application company that developed AetherPad, the first iPad-based application for anesthesiologists to collect data during surgery, as well as during pre- and post-op procedures. “The software is intelligent, and even has an autocoding feature for procedures, diagnoses and ASA codes, as well as the ability to learn the user’s preferences for medications and notes by procedure,” Mr. Calomeni says of the technology he helped to innovate. Noted for his considerable expertise, he also lends his talents to Aether Medical Business Services, an organization that he created to streamline medical billing services for doctors, private practices, surgical centers and urgent care centers. Mr. Calomeni attributes his success to being results-oriented, while also maintaining a positive outlook. He hires well, and is always sure to motivate his teams. In addition, he has the ability to manage without micromanaging, which he feels is the most productive way to motivate teams.

When asked what separates him from other professionals in his field, Mr. Calomeni credits his 30-plus years of experience in engineering software development. He is focused on quality results, and has a history of delivering quality products on time, as well as being extremely focused on customer satisfaction. He leads his team with proficiency, motivating them to discover their capabilities. Mr. Calomeni has experienced a number of achievements during his career, but most of all he is very proud of the teams he has built and managed. There have been a number of people who have worked for him who have moved into executive-level roles, and he finds great satisfaction in knowing he was a part of that growth. He is also proud of helping to produce a high-quality product and contributing to medical technology in an innovative and important way.

As a business executive and entrepreneur, Mr. Calomeni doesn’t have a “normal” daily routine. At any given moment he can be found running engineering and quality assurance operations, managing a team, developing strategic plans, or ensuring adherence to HIPPA standards. “It’s all in a day’s work and I love it,” Mr. Calomeni says of his ever-changing responsibilities. Looking to the future, he intends to create software and products that will keep his company ahead of trends and in line with what the industry demands. Mr. Calomeni plans to lead both of his companies to success and ensure that they thrive.
